HOSPITALITY

The various sectors of the hospitality industry—including hotels, restaurants and entertainment venues—all face the same dilemma: With each new day, the space must look as good as it did the day before. That's not easy considering the relentless abuse these commercial spaces take.

Vertical and horizontal surfaces that come in close daily contact with man and machine are particularly vulnerable. Laminates are excellent choices for these environments and are often selected for their impact and scratch resistance. The realism of today's laminates makes them nearly indistinguishable from natural materials.

1 Textured TFL is functional and attractive for vertical surfaces throughout a restaurant, while HPL and 3DL add impact resistance and ease of cleaning to tables and other horizontal surfaces. 2 Custom laminates add a specialized—and savory—touch to the wall of a restaurant. 3 Warm and cozy spaces are imperative in high-end hotels. This dramatic back wall is produced from routed and flat MDF panels, surfaced in thermoformed PET. 4 Routed MDF with a high-gloss 3DL surface provides a feeling of depth and evokes the look of flowing water on the wall of this restaurant.
